WAVE IWD 2025

30 years after the Beijing Platform for Action set a bold vision for gender equality, progress remains fragile. Violence against women persists, anti-rights movements threaten hard-won gains, and deep-rooted inequalities continue to shape women's lives. The Beijing +30 Action Agenda is a crucial opportunity to renew our collective commitment to women's rights and gender equality.

NEW WAVE MEMBER

We are happy to welcome our first new WAVE member of 2025! The International Women's Network in Estonia (IWNE) is now part of the WAVE Network, joining our shared commitment to ending violence against women and girls. With each new member, our network grows not just in numbers, but in strength, knowledge, and solidarity. "Becoming a WAVE member strengthens our mission at IWNE to support and empower migrant women in Estonia. Together, we stand for a safer, more inclusive society, ensuring all women and children live free from violence", says our new member.

ECHOES OF HARM PODCAST

What does it take to survive – and heal from – male violence? Echoes of Harm is a new four-part podcast exploring the devastating psychological impact of violence against women and girls. Guided by feminist journalist Marisa Bate, it shares the voices of survivors, families of femicide victims, and those working to support healing and justice. Released on International Women's Day, this series sheds light on the often-invisible scars of violence – and calls on us to listen, raise awareness, and work towards prevention, so that women and girls never have to experience such harm.

SHAPING CHANGE: LEGAL, POLICY & ADVOCACY UPDATES

ARMENIA: WOMEN'S RIGHTS ORGS AT RISK DUE TO US POLICY SHIFTS

Recent U.S. policy shifts have had serious consequences for gender-based violence response efforts and women's rights advocacy in Armenia. Following the Trump administration's reinstatement of the Global Gag Rule and suspension of foreign aid, a vital program run by WAVE member in Armenia Women's Resource Center (WRC), funded by the U.S. Embassy, was abruptly halted. The project had been providing essential support to displaced women, and its sudden termination left around 40 women without assistance, increasing their vulnerability.

More broadly, the freeze has placed several Armenian women's rights organisations at risk—many of which depend on U.S. support for their very existence. These cuts have encouraged anti-gender rhetoric in the country and contributed to the shrinking space for work on sexual and reproductive rights, which are increasingly framed as "controversial". In the face of this global backlash, cross-border feminist solidarity and collective action are more critical than ever.

GEORGIA: GENDERED REPRESSION

Georgian legislation first recognised the term gender in 2017 after ratifying the Istanbul Convention. Now, the illegitimate government is attempting to remove the term from the legal framework—a deeply concerning move amid a series of harmful initiatives. This decision undermines women's and LGBTQ+ rights, erases the gendered nature of violence against women, and falsely frames gender as incompatible with Georgian society, disregarding its social and legal significance. Despite these threats, Georgian women's rights organisations remain at the forefront, resisting attempts to roll back democracy and human rights.

SWEDEN: AWARENESS RAISING THROUGH INK

WAVE member in Sweden Women's Shelter in Jamtland County (Kvinnojouren Jämtlands län) launched a unique initiative: offering free tattoos of the female symbol (♀) to raise awareness about the fight against men's violence against women. A feminist tattoo artist collaborated with the shelter, eager to support the cause. The event was a great success—40 available tattoo slots were booked out quickly. Many participants shared that the tattoo held deep personal meaning for them, symbolising their commitment to women's rights and support for the shelter's work. For some, the tattoo became a powerful statement of resilience, having overcome violence themselves. Others attended simply to engage in conversation, making the event not just about the tattoos but also about connection and awareness.

ALBANIA: HONOURING WOMEN, MARCHING FOR FREEDOM & CHANGING SOCIAL NORMS

WAVE member in Albania Women Centre “Light Steps” (Qendra-Sociale “Hapa te Lehte”), organised t’Pa thana in the courtyard of the ‘Oso Kuka’ House-Museum—an event amplifying the voices of women and girls. Four women shared their stories of strength and resilience, sparking reflection on the challenges of overcoming patriarchal barriers, fighting for equality, and making their voices heard. The event honoured the contributions of rural women and beyond, highlighting their perseverance in an unequal world. Mimosa flowers, symbolising appreciation for women’s contributions, were brought from the organisation’s yard. Around 50 people attended as part of the EU-funded project Proud to Have Rights, promoting equality and inclusion.

WAVE member AWEN (Rrjeti i Fuqizimit të Grave Shqiptare) joined The Feminist Collective and other human rights organisations in Albania to protest for equality, social justice, and dignity. This year’s march focused on poverty as a major barrier to women’s freedom, highlighting the urgent need for fair employment and stronger state support. Activists also raised concerns about the economic precarity many women face. Additionally, the march shed light on the multiple forms of violence and discrimination experienced by marginalised groups, particularly women with disabilities. The event served as a powerful reminder that true gender equality requires concrete action from both the state and society.

WAVE member Psycho-Social Centre “Vatra” (Quendra Psiko-Sociale “Vatra”), in collaboration with Vlora Public Library and students from “Ali Demi” public high school, organised a discussion forum on Changing Social Norms to Combat Violence Against Girls and Women. The discussion focused on the causes and consequences of violence, exploitation, abuse, and bullying in schools and in social networks. Participants highlighted the lasting impact of these issues on individuals and society, stressing the importance of education and awareness-raising in addressing them. Students shared their experiences and concerns regarding gender roles in families and society, as well as violations of women’s rights. They reflected on the challenges of living in a patriarchal society and the urgent need for change.

BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA: DEMANDING EQUALITY

WAVE member in Bosnia and Herzegovina Foundation “United Women” Banja Luka (“Udružene žene” Banja Luka) organised the March 8th Solidarity and Women’s Dignity March in collaboration with partners from the Human Rights House in Banja Luka. Despite the long struggle for fundamental rights—including the right to vote, access to education, bodily autonomy, freedom from violence, equal pay, and career advancement—women continue to face various forms of violence and ongoing attempts to undermine legally recognised rights.

The march started in front of the National Theatre and moving towards Krajina Square, accompanied by whistles and tam-tam drums. At the square, the Foundation's volunteer Ivana, a journalism student, read out key demands:

- More effective measures to prevent violence against women
- Protection of reproductive rights
- Dignified work and social security
- Political equality

Banners carried by participants, including young girls and boys, attracted particular attention, reinforcing the urgent call for gender equality.

ENGLAND: RED FLAGS CAMPAIGN

WAVE member in England (UK) Refuge launched a powerful new campaign for International Women's Day to raise awareness of the many forms of domestic abuse that often go unrecognised, unseen, unreported and untold – ranging from economic and psychological abuse to coercive control, and more. The charity's Red Flags campaign was sparked by data from a UK-wide survey it commissioned, which revealed that a staggering three-quarters of UK adults are unaware of the true scale of domestic abuse. To highlight this gap in understanding, Refuge unveiled an immersive installation at Outernet London's flagship digital exhibition space. It featured 100 physical red flags, each bearing a quote from a domestic abuse survivor. These were mirrored on digital screens and accompanied by a dynamic soundscape voiced by celebrities such as actors Olivia Colman, Bella Ramsay, and Adjoa Andoh. The campaign, which attracted widespread media attention and significant in-person and online engagement, was part of a month-long awareness drive.

CROATIA: FEMINISM KNOWS NO BOUNDARIES

WAVE member in Croatia SOS Rijeka - Center for Nonviolence and Human Rights (SOS Rijeka - centar za nenasilje i ljudska prava) participated in this year's Night March, raising the questions "how much longer?" and "why still?". The march centred on remembrance and justice for women who have been victims of femicide, rape, and other forms of gender-based violence.

The following day, SOS Rijeka took part in filming the final scene of For Your Own Good, a film created in collaboration with the Filmaktiv association. The film features Vanda Velagić, Ana Marija Brđanović, and Anja Sabol from the Collective Igralke, and is directed by Ana Trobec, Mirela Džafić, Valentina Botica, and Mirna Unuk, who also wrote the screenplay.

IWD 2025 concluded with a literary-feminist gathering featuring writer Marina Vujčić, where her novel The Safe House was presented. An informal roundtable discussion followed, during which SOS Rijeka's psychologists Mia Mudri and Lorena Zec highlighted the issue of gender-based violence.

GERMANY: TACKLING TECH-FACILITATED ABUSE

From 17-21 March, WAVE member in Germany FHK - Association of Women's Shelters (Frauenhauskoordination e.V.) ran a campaign on its social media channels Instagram, Facebook and Bluesky to inform about the dimensions of Tech-facilitated Abuse and its impact on the counselling work in women's shelters.

Attention was drawn to statistics on Tech-facilitated Abuse and those affected, case studies from counselling and training courses for counsellors, which are offered by FHK. The aim was to show why the expertise of women's shelter counsellors on Tech-facilitated Abuse is needed. The campaign was created within the project "Tech-facilitated Abuse" of FHK. More information can be found on the project website and on social media (in German) here.

ARMENIA: PREVENTION & EMPOWERMENT

WAVE member in Armenia Women's Rights House (WRH) continues its mission to protect and advocate for women's rights by conducting awareness-raising meetings and therapeutic sessions across various communities in Shirak. In addition, WRH specialists regularly organise meetings/discussions focused on domestic and sexual violence prevention. These sessions empower women and girls with essential knowledge about their rights and available support mechanisms. The psychologist of the Women's Rights House also provides group therapies, such as art therapy, clay therapy, among other, supporting survivors in rebuilding their confidence and emotional well-being. By fostering safe spaces for dialogue, WRH strengthens community resilience and aims to promote a culture of zero tolerance for violence.

ALBANIA: SOCIAL MENTORING FOR EMPLOYMENT

The Social Mentoring program, implemented by WAVE member in Albania Gender Alliance for Development Center (GADC) with support from GIZ, has successfully mentored 45 individuals over one year, focusing on the employment and professional development of vulnerable groups in the country. Participants included women survivors of domestic violence, persons with disabilities, members of the LGBTQ+ community, and other individuals from marginalised backgrounds. Through tailored mentoring, participants gained skills in learning new languages, computer literacy, financial management, and artisanal production such as soap and candle making, fostering self-employment. Others benefited from technical training in nail care and other vocational courses, enhancing their employability in different sectors. As a result, 81.9% of mentees secured employment or launched income-generating activities. Beyond direct support, GADC is advocating for the formal recognition of social mentoring as a profession in Albania, ensuring its integration into national employment policies and expanding access to structured mentoring programs.
